

WASTE NOT WANT NOT

This is Slip – the UK's first green-water restaurant based in Brighton. The interior was designed by husband and wife team Raines & Fricker, who are eco-conscious and believe in creating things that will last. Hence why they repurposed old school tables and office floor insulation to make benches, seating and tables. There's a very good feeling about this place, so make sure you pop in if you're passing by. businesswithfric.net and slipbrighton.com.

Seriously STRIPEY

Do you want to create an amazing splashback? Take a look at these Gomme ceramics which are available in four designs inspired by men's shirt stripes. They're shown here in blue and white but you can also choose from other colours on request. From £11 per tile. gomme.com

Helping you plan your next kitchen down to the details, SeMatic has just revealed its latest kitchen planning concepts. A new door style which is available in various finishes, offers a signature curved 6.5mm edge and a minimalist line with different handle options. The S2-R option is handleless with a recessed grip slot, and the S2-3003 option offers two handle types. SeMatic kitchens with S2-3003 and S2-R components start from £10,000. sematic.co.uk

FLAWLESS LOOKS

Touch WOOD

If an upstated style isn't what you're after, why not go for something simple in wood? The LES dining chair by Tavit Design is made from English sustainably sourced timbers in ash or oak. Contrasting woods for the seat and legs can create a characterful look. It's finished by hand and treated with a hardwax oil for a low luster finish. £285. clippings.com
